

Advocacy for Victims

Victim Advocates provide confidential support & resources.

The Cornell Victim Advocacy Program is dedicated to assisting any member of the Cornell community who has been the victim of a crime or other traumatic incident, regardless of where it occurred. The service is free and client-centered. Conversations are confidential and Victim Advocates do not keep formal records for the university.

Support

Victim Advocates CAN:

- provide an opportunity for you to talk about what happened
- help you consider your options and resources
- serve as a liaison with department, college, or university offices
- offer ongoing support by accompanying you to meetings, court hearings, or serving as a liaison with law enforcement or court personnel, etc.

Referral

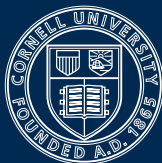

Victim Advocates can not assist with every kind of crime or conflict. For example, the kinds of cases listed below may be referred to another campus or community resource:

- crimes against property
- tenant/landlord disputes and roommate quarrels
- instances in which individuals feel they have been treated unfairly by professors, teaching assistants, or supervisors
- instances in which individuals feel they have been unfairly accused of crimes or campus code violations
